Lecture on 'Fundamental Rights in Our Constitution' by Prof. V. S. Doke (26-11-2016)

REPORT

Prof. V. S. Doke, Associate Professor, Department of Political Science, delivered a lecture on 'Fundamental Rights in Our Constitution' on 26-11-2016. He said that the Indian Constitution is a unique and the longest written constitution in the world that reflects the unity in diversity of our country.

He said that the fundamental rights is the soul of our constitution. According to him, the Right to Equality, states that all the people of India are equal before the law and there is no discrimination. He also said that the Right of Freedom incorporates freedom of speech and expression, freedom to assemble peacefully, to form associations, to move freely in India, to reside and settle in the Indian territory, to practice any profession etc.

He also said that the Right against Exploitation prohibits traffic of people and beggars and other similar forms of forced labour and it is a punishable offence. He further pointed that the Right to Freedom of Religion is yet another provision which reflects the diversity in our society. People can set up religious institutions and follow their religious ideas and own moveable and immovable property. He also added that the Right to Life is also stated explicitly and people have the right to liberty and the punishments are given by the law as per the constitutional provisions. He also referred to the cultural and educational rights, right to constitutional remedies and the right to privacy.

He said that over the last 65 years, the fundamental rights have helped the people of India prosper and live happily. He said that the rights are so important that many times individuals and institutions have protested when the inhuman forces try to infringe them. In our constitutional history, the judiciary has given explanations from time to time in order to safeguard the fundamental rights.
